

Valerie Gold, MPA, is a senior associate at the Center for Social Innovation and serves as deputy director of BRSS TACS. Ms. Gold has over 20 years of experience working with youth, families, adults, organizations, and communities. As a BRSS TACS deputy director, she has led training and technical assistance (TTA) activities for peer run organizations, recovery community organizations, states, and others. She oversees product development for BRSS TACS, from conceptualization through production and clearance. Before C4, Ms. Gold led programs in vocational rehabilitation, youth development, violence prevention, child welfare, juvenile justice, family preservation, youth and adult employment services, and workforce development in New York, Hawaii, and Massachusetts. Her work in child welfare and juvenile justice has focused on preserving or reunifying families affected by parental substance use disorders (SUD), developing and improving services for children and adolescents in out-of-home placement, and advocating for appropriate educational, clinical, placement, and transitional services as well as lasting social connections for young people facing separation from their families, complex learning and emotional needs, SUD, early parenthood, and chronic illness. Ms. Gold's work is informed by her own experience as a family member of individuals with behavioral health needs, and driven by her belief in the value, potential, and resilience of every person.
